Not illustrated. 1839 Excerpt: .Parson Bate, who was then editor of the original Morning Post daily newspaper, and lodged in Buckingham-street, York Buildings; He was fond of music, played the violoncello, and had been well taught by Mr. Newby, the principal performer on that instrument at the Theatre Royal Drury Lane. During a Sunday evening, while I was visiting the parson and assisting in a little concert, Mr. Crotch of Norwich was introduced, together with his little boy, the present Dr. Crotch, professor of music in the University of Oxford, for the purpose of the reverend gentleman and his musical friends hearing the latter play the pianoforte. The child, who appeared to be about three years old, displayed extraordinary genius for one of his lender age, and surprised and delighted all those who witnessed his efforts, although he labored under the disadvantage of playing on a strange piano-forte instead of...
