This type of publication is every thing and helped me seeking ahead and much more. It usually fails to charge too much. It is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding, once you begin to read the book.

BETWEEN the decline of the Pisan school at the end of the fourteenth century and the rise of the Florentine, nearly half a century elapsed, during which sculpture, as an art, slumbered. Orcagna reared his church of Or San Michele and the graceful Loggia de Lanzi, but the hands which were destined to adorn these buildings with their priceless beauties of carven stone, were not yet in existence. Orcagna himself heralded the Renaissance--as the first red streak heralds the dawn--in his sculptures on the altar of Or San Michele. The school which Giotto founded was essentially one of painting. The great master had so filled the hearts of the Florentines with the marvellous Christian truths which he impressed on their walls in colour, that Art--which seems to lie dormant in most nations till the right spring is touched to awaken it--arose, and found full expression in the silent harmonies of colour. Thus, while the Memmi, the Gaddi, and others were all following the steps of Giotto in painting, and even Orcagna left off building to paint Dantesque frescoes, --no worthy disciple of Andrea Pisano was found. During the fourteenth century, so barren of sculpture in Florence, one of the plastic arts nourished still, -- that of goldworking; an art which is sure to prosper in the early days of a nation's wealth: that time when riches are valued for themselves, and when, before a perfect banking system and commercial...
