Excerpt: . . . of Mrs. Slanfora Mlier, and his Yellozo Dress are signalized in the annals of American art, and why the author of those sane and distinguished canvases should put forth a series of blurred, miasmatic, and nightmarish conceptions like those recently shown at Montrosss is a problem quite beyond our comprehension. Perhaps we lack perception, and in view of our admiration of Mr. Dewing at his best, we should like to be convinced of our errors, but from our present coign of vantage we see little that is wholesome in these canvases. were held in New York by some of our less noted artists, that, in each case, showed the record of individual observation of definite localities and of no less definite aspects of nature. We mean that each artist painted a spot which he knew, rendering it under a morning, noonday, or evening sky. Everett Shinns pastels at Boussod-Valadons consisted of New York street scenes and a few portraits. His portraits are decidedly inadequate; but the street scenes are graphic, the aim of the artist being to record momentary aspects of metropolitan life. His boys run, his crowds move hither and thither, his street sweepers are busy at work. Mr. Shinn has a well-educated eye for color values, and his House Top: (rainy day) (2), Unloading at the Dock (16), Cooper Union Fountain (22), and Park Row (35) show glimpses of brick and building stones seen through a New York winter haze,...
